

lost his bar --

A. Right.

Q. - because he was out of business?

A. Right. He kept saying I didn't know anything, I can buy and sell you, all these types of things, and finally I said: "At least we're still open." I did say that, and I shouldn't have said it, you know.

Q. All right. And so obviously you knew before this particular night that after eight or ten years of owning a bar, he had lost it?

A. Right. I did know that, right.

Q. And obviously, it didn't take much for you to see that the fact that he lost his bar was an upsetting thing?

A. Touched a nerve.

Q. But whatever you said that you might want to take back now, and whatever he said that perhaps he might want to take back now, nevertheless --

A. It's been said.

Q. --it was done, it's between you and he and nobody else?

A. Right.
