

A. Thomas King, the bartender Jeff, they told me that everybody in the place was assaulted with this broken beer bottle, and they told me that in the fashion that it was broken, it was like -- like the guy was walking out the door like this, keeping people off of him in that fashion.

(Witness indicating with hands.)

A. So to me, that's assault with a dangerous weapon, a broken beer bottle. It's going to keep me away.

Q. And that was --but you named Thomas King as the alleged victim of that?

A. He was a victim. It could have turned out that there had been more. If I had found that girl, she would have been a victim. Maybe Jeff said: I don't want to be bothered with that stuff -- he doesn't want to be a victim of that, you know, different --different reasons why.

Q. All right. Now, when you saw Mr. Elbery on the ground with the three people on him, how was he fighting?

A. Well, like anybody else, I guess, struggling. You know, you don't want three people on your back holding you down, you know.
